Commissioner:

We herby declare that:

Each inventor's residence, mailing address and citizenship are stated below next to their name.

We believe the inventors named below to be the original and first inventors of the subject matter which is described and claimed in patent number 6,557,671 B1 (hereinafter "the '671 patent"), granted May 6, 2003 and for which a reissue patent is sought on the invention entitled CABLE DISC BRAKE, the specification of which is attached hereto and is amended by the preliminary amendment submitted herewith.

We have reviewed and understand the contents of the above-identified specification, including the claims, as amended by the preliminary amendment submitted herewith.

We acknowledge the duty to disclose information that is material to patentability as defined in 37 C.F.R. §1.56.

BEST AVAILABLE COPY

We verily believe the original patent to be wholly or partly inoperative or invalid by reason of the patentee claiming more or less than they had the right to claim in the patent.

At least one error upon which reissue is based is described as follows:

The specification states at column 1, lines 65-67, that one object of the invention is to provide a cable disc brake that prevents loss of efficiency during a movement of a cam mechanism under high pressure. To that end, claim 1 recites, inter alia, a cable disc brake comprising a caliper housing (30); a first friction member (32) movably coupled to said caliper housing (30) between a release position and a braking position; a second friction member (32) coupled to said caliper housing (30) and arranged substantially parallel to said first friction member (32) to form a rotor receiving slot therebetween; and an actuated mechanism movably coupled to said caliper housing (30) to move said first friction member (32) in an axial direction from said release position towards said second friction member (32) to said braking position. The actuated mechanism includes an input cam (90) movably mounted within said caliper housing (30) and an output cam (91) movably mounted within said caliper housing to move in an axial direction in response to rotation of said input cam (90).

While not recited in the claim, the actuated mechanism also includes an actuating assembly (36) that comprises, inter alia, an actuating arm (98) that rotates the input cam (90). As stated at column 10, lines 23-45, the actuating arm (98) has a cylindrical main portion (98a) with an outwardly extending cable mounting portion (98b). The cable mounting portion (98b) has a threaded bore (98g) at its free end for receiving a clamping bolt (103) with a clamping plate (104) to secure the end of an inner wire (25a) of a cable (19a) thereto. A projection (98i) is formed at the free end in the direction of the inner wire (25a) of the cable (19a). This projection (98i) has a curved surface for supporting the inner wire (25a) of the cable (19a) during rotation of the actuating arm (98).

The curved surface (98i) also prevents loss of efficiency during a movement of the cam mechanism under high pressure because it reduces the stress acting on the cable and the clamp and further distributes the forces transmitted through the cable evenly throughout the length of the curved surface. However, none of the existing claims recite any of these features.

After the '671 patent issued, we became aware of U. S. patent number 6,520,297 B1 (hereinafter "the '297 patent"). The '297 patent narrowly claims a number of features of a cable disc brake including a lever arm that rotates around a pivot axis to actuate the disc brake. The lever arm includes a cable clamp and a guide surface, wherein the cable clamp is radially spaced from the pivot axis for fixedly attaching a cable to the lever arm at an attachment point, and the guide surface is curved about the pivot axis. The guide surface has a first portion attached to the lever arm with the attachment point essentially coincident therewith and a second portion circumferentially spaced from the first portion. The second portion extends from the first portion toward a cable guide such that the second portion is essentially tangent to a guide axis of the cable guide when the lever arm is in a non-actuated position.

In the examiner's statement of reasons for allowance of the '297 patent, the examiner stated that none of the references cited during prosecution of that case either alone or in combination provided a guide surface curved about a pivot axis having a first portion attached to the lever arm and a second portion circumferentially spaced from the first portion, the second portion being essentially tangent to a guide axis with the lever arm in a non-actuated position.

We did not appreciate the patentability of such a feature, which is clearly disclosed in our own patent, so it appears that we claimed less than we had a right to claim in our patent.

Inventor Kazuhisa Yamashita is responsible for the configuration of the actuating arm in the '671 patent, so he should be added as a co-inventor for those claims that recite specific features of the actuating arm.

All errors corrected in this reissue application arose without any deceptive intention on the part of the applicant.
